

I am Avinash (ah-vee-nahsh) Iyer (ai-yer), and I'm originally from Fremont, California (a BART suburb of San Francisco and San Jose). I'm currently a second year math and econ major at Oxy, and I'm primarily taking macro for the purposes of graduation. However, more generally, I'm a big fan of economics because it's a great way to explain the world around us and can inform the livelihoods and well-being of lots of people. I'm also a big fan of public transportation (though not in Los Angeles because LA Metro is awful) and cities more generally — unfortunately, I seem to have come to the exact wrong place for someone interested in this kind of stuff, but one has to deal with the world as it is. Aside from that, I am a big  $\text{\LaTeX}$ junkie and love technology generally (partly because my handwriting is extremely bad).

This is what I look like:

Picture of me